

Dear Administrator Regan:

We strongly support the Mercury and Air Toxics Standards created to clean up coal and oil-fired power plants, as well as the finding that these standards are appropriate and necessary. We urge you to set stronger standards to further protect kids from toxic pollution.

The Mercury and Air Toxics Standards protect babies from birth defects by cleaning up mercury. They also limit toxic pollutants that cause cancer and breathing problems and harm the cardiovascular and nervous systems.

EPA is right to restore the finding that the standards are appropriate and necessary. Now, the agency must go further. Even with these standards in place, coal-fired power plants still emit mercury, acid gases and other toxic pollution. We call on EPA to set even stronger limits on mercury and air toxics to fully protect our families.

Signed,
